DESERTS THE AMPHITRITE

He was but a young lad, and he had a father in old England who was paralyzed and unable to help himself. So the lad thought it devolved upon him to do more for his father than could be done out of the wages of a jacky on a British man-of-war. This is the story that Henry Jackson, a runaway from the big cruiser Amphitrite, told Harry Flint when that officer ran him down in a rice field out Kakaako way last night, and escorted him to the police station, where he was held as a deserter-and whence he will be taken on board to-

It appears that Jackson, who is a lad of about twenty, fell in love with Honolulu, as so many of the British tars on the cruiser did. Indeed there were some men of higher class than the jackies that fell in love with Honolulu-but that is another kind of a story. And, anyway, an officer and a gentleman does not break leave and stay on shore when he falls in love. He goes on his tour of duty, as usual, and presently he gets a furlough and comes back first cabin in a swell liner.

The jacky looks at matters from a different plane. Henry Jackson did, for example. He fell in love with, oh, varlous things. For instance, there was a native girl down Kakaako way who had him concealed in the rice field when Harry Flint went after him, and who would have kept him concealed, too, if the officer had not been wise in the ways of native girls. As it was, the officer went right to his man, and Jackson gave up at once. He knew enough of authority to know when he was up against the real thing. The police will go to the native gir!, later, and get the young jackey's clothes to be sent off to the cruiser with him.

It seems that young Jackson had planned very deliberately to cut 'the cruiser at this port. The men have been given a good deal of liberty from bis kit ashore, a bit at a time. It all (IN BREWER building, Queen street, went into the keeping of the native girl. So did Jackson, when the ship finally cart off from the dock at the naval station and went out to her anchorage beyond the reef. Of course he was missed at the number of his mess at once, and Captain Windham reported the fact to the police. Captain perhaps. Anyway he said h regulation punishment when he got him back. And then Harry Flint went spooking down into Kakaako and found his man. And then Jackson told him that hard luck story about his old paralytic father and his desire to earn more money for the old man's support than his naval pay would give him." He had heard of the wonderful prosperity, and the wonderful chances for young men in America, and this was his first chance to land in an American port. But there are some things young Jackson has yet to learn about America and the ways of Americans. Among

AND THE WATCH

A vagrant fell into the net of Detective McDuffie yesterday, and thereby hangs something of a tale. The vagrant, Juan Castro by name, is a Porto Rican, and looks the part. It seems that there is a lady in the case. Also, a watch. There is this connection between the lady and the watch, that the lady accused him of having, well, to put it mildly, appropriated that bit of personal property from her possessions. Now, it developed that Juan did really have the watch-or, rather, that he had concealed it under a certain boot-black stand where he could recover it at leisure, "when the thing blew over." In there. this case it was the lady who did the Weather-Fair to cloudy and slight blowing, with the result that the police set the machinery of detection in mo-Forecast for March 7-Fresh trades to tion. And then several things were detected. Among other things, it was found that the watch did not belong to for. the lady, either. It was the property of a certain gentleman of color, who did not at all know where it had gone, but who will doubtless be charmed to recover his property. As to Juan, the vagrancy charge goes, for the present. There may be contingencies in the fu-
